At the ends of the Earth, customs, legends and nature intertwine, and a mysterious situation arises.

This is the fourth book of a saga that has been a best seller in schools for many years. The story of cousins Pablo and Diego and their family together with spectacular natural landscapes, from the driest desert in the world to Patagonia, reveal the narrative talent of one of the most outstanding Latin American authors.

In this volume, Diego is invited by his grandfather to know each other at his home in the Chilean Patagonia. The grandfather's wish is to recover the lost relationship with Diego, who will start to create an emotional bond with the lands where he comes from. After a robbery at the grandfather's house arises a mystery in the style of those Victorians in which nothing is what it seems. And although the immense and indomitable nature captivates the cousins, they will not rest until discovering the real culprit and motive.

“ Antonia burst into her brother Pablo's bedroom and said seriously and firmly:

—Something happens.

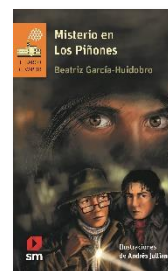

Diego, her cousin, looked up from the screen. He was finishing up a presentation for Biology class and wasn't distracted when he was focused. Pablo kept throwing the ball into a basket attached to the door. He turned on his back and jumped before hitting the target.
